A little history.

I'm Josh St. Laurent, founder of Wealth In Yourself.

I spent more than a decade in professional financial planning before starting this firm. The work shaped my conviction about what financial planning could be — a discipline that starts with a person's life, not their portfolio.

I worked with a lot of clients who were doing meaningful, complicated things — building businesses, raising families, designing the lives they actually wanted — and I came to believe their financial planning should serve those lives directly. Plan first, around the life. Investments and products in service of the plan, not the other way around.

So in April 2022, I walked away. I took zero clients with me. I waited about six months for the SEC and the State of Nevada to approve our paperwork, and then opened our doors that October. I built the firm I wished my clients had had access to all along — flat-fee, fiduciary in all things, life-first.

Today we work with business owners, real estate investors, high-earning professionals, and FIRE followers who are serious about building the life they actually want.

AS SEEN IN

People We Love Working With

We work with people who are intentional, curious, and committed to designing the life they actually want — not just chasing returns. They've built something that matters to them — a business, a portfolio, a family, a body of work — and they want their money to serve that life rather than dictate it.

Entrepreneurs and Business Owners. Founders and operators with growing businesses who want their personal finances to keep pace with what they're building — coordinated tax strategy, owner compensation that actually works, and a clear picture of how the business plays into the rest of their life.

Real Estate Investors. Investors building wealth through rentals, development, or larger commercial deals who want coordination across entities, taxes, financing, and long-term strategy — not a generalist advisor learning the asset class on their dime.

High-Earning Professionals. W-2 professionals — often in tech, finance, medicine, or law — managing equity compensation, complex benefits, and meaningful income, often coordinating with a spouse around dual incomes and family planning. They want a plan that treats their compensation as the strategic asset it actually is.

FIRE Followers. High savers focused on optionality and time freedom who want intentional planning, not extreme deprivation or generic advice. They're often building toward a specific kind of life and want a partner who takes that life seriously.

What To Expect As A Client

The 15-minute call is just to see if there's a fit. If we decide to work together, here's the road ahead. Our process brings clarity first, then builds the plan around the life you're actually building — not the money you happen to have. Over nine meetings across the first year, we work through five phases.

1. Get Oriented.

We learn how your business, investments, and finances actually work today, including where complexity and stress are showing up. — Arrival Note.

2. Surface Your Story.

We explore the beliefs, history, and family patterns that shape how you make money decisions — the part of planning most advisors skip, and the reason I trained as a financial therapist. — Money Story Memo.

3. Envision Your Life.

We work through the questions most financial professionals never ask — what life you're actually building, and what the money needs to do for it — then name the obstacles in the way. — Vision Statement.

4. Design the Plan.

We build an integrated plan that coordinates cash flow, taxes, investments, real estate, and the rest around your goals and constraints.

5. Live the Plan.

We deliver your Wealth In Yourself Blueprint, then meet on a regular cadence to revisit decisions, adjust for change, and refresh it annually as a Re-Vision. — Wealth In Yourself Blueprint.

This is not a one-time plan. It's an ongoing advisory relationship.

How Our Flat Fee is Calculated

Our fee is calculated using a declining percentage model based on total net worth (excluding primary residence), then converted into a flat annual advisory fee, billed monthly.

The declining percentage approach reflects how complexity actually grows — the work expands meaningfully through the first million in net worth and then increases more gradually after that. Our flat-fee structure means our compensation doesn't grow when your portfolio does — your work is priced for its complexity, not for the size of your assets.

Minimum annual advisory fee of $15,000 ($1,250/month), for households with a minimum recommended net worth of $1,000,000. Ongoing relationship required.

What Does Your Ideal Life Look Like?

Financial life planning means starting with what you actually want your life to look like, then building the plan to serve it.

Consider these three questions as you head into our conversation:

1

Take the money question off the table. You have enough — enough that the standard worries don't run your decisions anymore. Now: what does your actual life look like? Not the goals you'd check off — the life itself. Where do you wake up? What's the work you give your mornings to? Who's around the table? What does an ordinary Tuesday look like?

2

Now put a clock on it. You learn you get five more years — maybe ten, no more — and your health holds the whole way, full strength to the last day, but the end arrives without warning. What stays? What stops? What starts? Which work do you walk away from, and which do you finally begin?

3

Last one. You have one day left. What rises? The thing you never finished. The person you didn't get around to becoming. The work you kept postponing, the conversation you never had. Name what surfaces.

This sequence is inspired by the life-planning tradition of George Kinder; the questions here are Wealth In Yourself's own.

Looking forward to our conversation.

The 15-minute call we have on the calendar is our chance to figure out if there's a fit. No agenda beyond that — if it makes sense to keep going, we'll talk about next steps. If not, the conversation should help you get clearer on what you're looking for in an advisor.

If anything comes up before then — you need to reschedule, or a question occurs to you — just email me directly at josh@wealthinyourself.com.

Talk to you soon.

— Josh
